Voicing opposition

The Glenaladale Reserve was a sea of orange last Saturday with more than 400 people participating in a rally to voice their opposition to a proposal for a mineral sands mine in the area.

The rally was organised by Mine-Free Glenaladale, a community group formed in response to Kalbar Operations proposed mine project.

One of the rally organisers and a speaker at the event, Debbie Carruthers, called on the Victorian Government to listen to the concerns of the community and reject Kalbar's mine proposal.

"There are radioactive and cancer-causing substances in what is being mined; uranium and thorium are just some of the heavy metals of concern," she said.

"Airborne dust containing heavy metals and silica are health risks to humans and grazing animals with dust travelling long distances.

"The veggie industry in the Lindenow Valley, a major food bowl for the country, that can be seen from here, is only 500 metres downwind from the mine. When that dust lands on those crops, the viability of that industry and thousands of direct and indirect jobs will be at risk.

"Our wild and heritage listed Mitchell River is only 350 metres downwind. It is a major source of drinking and irrigation water and is important to our fishing and tourism industries. The Gippsland Lakes Ramsar wetlands are also at risk.

"Kalbar now say they made a mistake in their Environment Effects Statement (EES). They will need five billion litres of water annually for 20 years if the use of centrifuges, which have never been used in mineral sands mining, is unviable. That water is needed for more sustainable uses."

The Victorian Minister for Planning, Richard Wynne, appointed an Inquiry and Advisory Committee (IAC) to hear submissions in response to Kalbar's EES. The hearing started on Monday with the first six of nine weeks on video conference, followed by local submitters being heard at a venue to be determined in Bairnsdale.

The IAC must submit its findings and recommendations to the Minister for Planning within 40 business days from the completion of its public hearing.
